

“Too Late to Apologize: A Declaration” by T.J. and the Revo

(Original Song – “Apologize” by One Republic)

Halfway across the globe, and we’re standing on new ground.
Screaming across the waves you can’t hear a sound.
There’s no fair trials, no trade, no liberties.
No Tea!
We’ve colonized America, we won’t stand for tyranny!

O King:
And it’s too late to apologize.
It’s too late!
I said it’s too late to apologize.
It’s too late!

We’ve paid your foolish tax, read the acts and they just won’t do.
We want to make it clear, we believe this much is true:
All men were created with certain unalienable rights!
Among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness!

It’s too late to apologize!
It’s too late!
I said it’s too late to apologize.
It’s too late!
It’s too late to apologize!
It’s too late!
I said it’s too late to apologize.
It’s too late!
I said it’s too late to apologize.
It’s too late!

Halfway across the globe, and we’re standing on new ground.

Put your “John Hancock” here: _____

A stylized, cursive signature of John Hancock, written in black ink. The signature is highly decorative, with long, sweeping flourishes that extend from the main body of the name. The letters are connected and fluid, characteristic of the original signature on the Declaration of Independence.
